Crawled Into His Hole.

The ground hog did have to not look very hard or his shadow yesterday if, according to an for his shadow yesterday if, according to an ancient and time-honored legend, he left his winter quarters for that purpose. There is no doubt that he saw it, and ere this he is singly esconced and out of the way of coming blizzards. This tradition has been handed down from time immemorial and is popularly believed to have emanated from the early Gotts, and to-day German peasants note carefully the weather on "Lichtmess," as they call it, so as to determine whether wintry weather is to continue or not. With the Catholics it is called "Candlemas," and candles are blessed this day for the use of the faithful.
